Hi Gary,

I do not know what specifics your friend in Arizona heard about the date, March 26th, 2016 in regard to Planet X. However, this incoming dwarf star has many months, perhaps a number of years before it will inflict its peak destruction of Earth as it cruises past us, nearing Earth by several million miles on its inexorable gravitational rendezvous with our attracting Sun. However, as you will hear from Terral Croft [below], his astronomy team's sightings of the dwarf star and its Sun-to-Earth alignments will cause earthquakes in the month of May, and with some scientific reasoning behind his prediction. You see, it is a well known fact that planetary alignments can cause Earth traumas, due to the compounding of the gravitational forces exerted by the planets which align with one another. Naturally, the magnitude of the alignment force is the key factor determining whether or not the alignment stress is sufficient to overcome the inertia of Earth's gravitationally targeted and more precariously situated tectonic plates. Thus, the iffyness of the earthquake threat rests upon the composite degree of those two variables: alignment stress and Earth's tectonic load resistance.

However, there are other variables which contribute to this compound equation, one main variable being the electrical discharge of plasma which may or may not occur along the imaginary line connecting the aligning planets. If, say, a comet intruding from deep space is engulfed in plasma (clouds of mainly hydrogen ions, exerting an electrically positive electrostatic force field) . . . plasma which it had picked up upon penetrating our Solar System's heliosphere, and if that plasma-saturated intruding comet crosses onto our Solar System's Ecliptic (plane), and at some point in our planets' orbits around the Sun, that comet happens to align with two of our gas giants, Jupiter and Saturn, and also aligns with Mars, Earth, and our Sun, then that electrostatic force field, established by the net positive charge engulfing the plasma-drenched comet . . . that cometary electric force field will be focused along the line of interplanetary alignment and it will see (i.e. sense) a low resistance discharge path right along that planetary alignment line established by the conjunction of the comet, Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, Earth, and our Sun. The result would be a powerful electrical discharge -- a macrocosmic bolt of electricity. That same sort of jolting phenomenon occurs when masses of electrons are updrafted into clouds and build up great electrical potential energy. The resultant discharge of this electricity from cloud to ground is actuated by the formation of a low-resistance path allowing the energy to discharge instantaneously. Heavy sheets of rain have less electrical resistance than air, especially when rain droplets carry electron-saturated dust particles. So, like a crack in a dam, the electrical pressure overcomes the weakened air resistance and hence, the powerful discharge travels along a narrow path of least resistance. So, you can see why the planetary/cometary alignment would naturally result in a cosmic sized lightning bolt -- and Earth is in that line of fire, especially as the progression of the planets' revolutions creates a disalignment, unblocking Earth so as to feel the full impact of that lightning bolt.

Therefore, this macrocosmic electric bolt, compounded with these planetary tug-of-warriors' macrocosmic gravitational pull along the planetary alignment line, could generate some unpredictable degree of trauma to Planet Earth, in the way of storms of all kinds (e.g. volcanic eruptions, earthquakes, tsunamis, hurricanes), all striking our planet simultaneously.

Returning to your question as to some prediction of Earth disasters on March 26th of this year, I can only say that I am not an astronomer, so I have no knowledge of the planetary/cometary positioning that may exist now and into the coming months of March through June. However, Terral Croft, whose audio clip is linked below, says that his collaboration with a team of astronomers yields knowledge of sizable earthquakes in the first week of May. So, listen to what he has to say, and then check to determine whether or not his claim of past correct earthquake predictions is authentic. I have not yet investigated such authenticity, but surely that needs to be checked out.

Without specifying a date, and through well over a decade of studying this subject, plus with years of experience as a New Jersey State certified high school science teacher, specializing in physics, and having spent much of my career as an electronics engineer with AT&T Bell Laboratories, I predict that the earthquakes, volcanic eruptions, and weather disasters will steadily worsen in magnitude and in frequency as this long since NASA-discovered-but-now-covered-up dwarf star makes its colossal, lazy, years-long U-turn in its cosmic flirtation with the Sun, at the very terminus of its centuries-long highly elliptical orbital trajectory into our Solar System from deep space.

These are some of my reasons for so predicting:

- 1) on the Weather Channel, over the past twelve years, I have been observing an increasing amplitude and contortion of the jetstream, which indicates, and indeed has dictated the surge in severe weather that the world has been experiencing in recent years;
- 2) there is also an increase in the size and number of mantle plumes (also called thermal plumes) belching up through Earth's underlying mantle to its lithospheric crust above, thus giving rise [pun intended] to volcanic eruptions and earthquakes;
- 3) there is an increase in the number of reports of meteoric shooting stars, frictionally ignited during their plunges to Earth from space;
- 4) I notice that the diabolical ruling elite have co-opted CalTech to boost NASA's flagging credibility among the world's community of scientists, who cannot be easily fooled as is the lay population. The California Institute of Technology appears to have been governmentally enlisted [I wonder if CalTech's research budget has recently increased] to boost NASA's credibility following its recently torpedoed "there's-no-PlanetX" political position. Just in this month of January, NASA has apparently enlisted non-governmental [and thus, non-suspect] CalTech to help calm the increasingly alarmed science community by colluding with and supporting NASA in their newly revised Planet X disinformation strategy, because the old strategy has been busted wide open, like a holiday pin'ata, by the independent international team of astronomers manning the world's largest radio-telescope observatory, the Atacama Large Millimeter Array (A.L.M.A.) Observatory in Chile. Just in December 2015, the ALMA team announced that they may have sighted Planet X, and this spectacular announcement appears to have so excited the world's astronomers, and has so alarmed NASA's de facto bosses, the diabolical ruling elite, that they felt compelled to defuse ALMA's highly credible sightings, using NASA's chosen astronomy guru, private CalTech's acclaimed non-NASA astronomer, the "Pluto-Killing" gladiator of astronomy, standing upon Pluto's planetary corpse, Dr. Michael Brown. Boy, you couldn't get a more respectably credible guy than him to promote NASA's newly designed "please-don't-worry -- yes-there-is-a-sort-of-PlanetX-but-it's-benign-and-that's-why-we-call-it-benign-Planet9-and-not-that-bad-old-PlanetX".

And so, one month after the ALMA announcement of possibly sighting what NASA used to call "Planet X," NASA was so shaken that they felt compelled to dissolve their decades-long marriage to the old "there's-no-PlanetX political stand, and to enlist the private, and hence more credible California Institute of Technology to issue a sensational publicity blast, one aimed at the both the science community and at the TV-viewing public. This publicity blast was presented like a spectacular laser light show, and it actually was very much like a laser light show, dazzling to the eyes, yet with nothing to grab onto. You see, CalTech's recent highly publicized story -- provoked by ALMA's announcement of the possible sighting of Planet X -- was not a discovery at all, but a creatively convoluted fantasy titled, "Planet 9" -- simply, we-just-pulled-Planet9-out-of-our-asstronomy. Could it be that this same Dr. Michael Brown who introduced the "Planet9" fantasy was years ago chosen as the "Pluto-Killer" to divorce Planet Pluto from our planetary family in order to make room for a new imaginary, theorized benign Planet9? Nahh! NASA could not have looked so far into the future as to contrive a new PlanetX disinformation stand for the future, as they foresaw that, at some point in Planet X's inexorable gravitational attraction to our Sun, first one major observatory would sight it . . . then another -- and another, until the whole "there's-no-PlanetX" stand would collapse under the sheer weight of astronomers' consensus! Nahh, NASA is not that farsighted! Are they? NASA is not smart enough to divorce

Planet Pluto from planetary status to make room for a new, fake, and very useful "ninth planet," the newly wed "Planet9" member of our Solar System family of planets -- the new lovable benign Planet9 -- a term which the newly organized NASA/CalTech disinformation crew chose to psychologically discredit the fearfully accepted term, "Planet X," coined by the renowned founder of the Lowell Observatory over a century ago [and maybe not so coincidentally, the very same observatory that discovered the now-divorced Planet Pluto]. Not only was Pluto discovered at the Lowell Observatory, but that observatory was actually searching for Planet X when Clyde Tombaugh serendipitously discovered Planet Pluto. Fast-forwarding to the late twentieth century, the term "Planet X" was accepted by NASA when it contracted the chief astronomer of the U.S. Naval Observatory, Dr. Robert S. Harrington, to search for Planet X, and to publish a document [now on the Internet] titled, "The Search for Planet X." NASA astronomers and other eminent astronomers published, in the New York Times, January 30, 1983, a lengthy landmark documentary piece titled, "Clues Get Warm in the Search for Planet X". And in December of that same year, the Washington Post published a front page declaration heralding the Infrared Astronomical Satellite's sighting of what the NSA told them to couch its identity under something other than "Planet X," because our secretive NSA suddenly realized that a dwarf star being pulled in by our Sun could shake the citizenry to overcome their fear of their ruling elite and replace the people's fear of man with the fear of someone in the heavens, someone like God, hurling this big curve ball past batter Earth to loop around catcher Sun. The NSA rules NASA and it even rules the CIA, and so, it is the NSA who ordered a ban on all reports of Planet X, replacing X with their absurd new high-profile smokescreen titled, "Planet 9," designed to pacify the science community when they start to sight Planetx-captured gangs of comets streaking toward, and some into, the Sun. NASA is thus prepared to mislead astronomers at the advent of these comet intrusions, because the new benign Planet9 story is designed to assure these scientists that Sun-drawn comet swarms "are perfectly normal, so not-to-worry." And, based upon the many reports of the rich and powerful elite of the world hastily attempting to flee Earth's surface, either temporarily into space or temporarily underground, because Earth's surface will, perhaps soon, be ravaged by geological and meteorological disasters . . . and based upon Catherine Austin Fitts's report on the secret space program by and for the ruling elite, her report of the shocking many trillions of dollars documented to have been flat-out stolen by these panicky ruling devils for the purpose of financing their secret subterranean cities and their secret space refuges . . . based upon this mountainous evidence, we absolutely know that many high-level military officers, politicians, industrialists, royalty, and banksters are preparing to go underground or into space in a desperate attempt to escape the devastation that will occur on Earth's surface as natural disasters build toward their inevitable crescendo.

~ Part 1) West Coast Earthquakes in May, Predicted by Astronomy Researcher

from Terral Croft, 03blackstar@gmail.com:

" My current research project predicted the Fukushima quake event within four days, when Earth passed between the Sun and Black Star. The next year the Guerrero, Mexico quake was predicted within just two days at the next alignment. The recent 7.8 Nepal Quake from April 25, 2015 was predicted far in advance along with the X-class solar flares that accompany these events. The next nearside alignment quake event will take place on May 7, 2016 along the Pacific Ocean/ Ring of Fire with increased pressures spreading through the US West Coast, then spreading East. "
